To prepare for the construction of the eastern ticket hall for the new Crossrail Liverpool Street station we are diverting utilities and undertaking archaeology works in the area around Liverpool Street, Blomfield Street and Old Broad Street.

For five weeks from 16 November we will be installing ducts, (to house rerouted utilities) in four locations in Old Broad Street (see attached plan). The works will be phased, beginning in location 1, finishing in location 4.

The works will involve breaking out and excavating the ground, laying new ducts and access covers, refilling the excavation, and reinstating the surface of the ground. Some traffic lane closures will be required although temporary management measures will be in place to maintain two-way traffic flow. Access to properties will be maintained at all times.

We are continuing to lay ducts which will carry communications cables in Blomfield Street and New Broad Street (explained in our September information sheet).

Archaeological investigations are also continuing on Liverpool Street. From 19 November we will be extending our worksite eastwards to support these works.

Excavation of a 12m deep shaft and construction of a new substation begins in November. These works will take place within our existing worksite at the level of the Circle/Hammersmith & City London Underground lines. Approximately four vehicle movements per day will be required to support these works.
